

Rxth, (pronounced Ruth) is a Sussex, U.K. based songwriter releasing music for people who have big feelings and big questions.

Sonically, it's dulcet toned vocals meets dusky electronic-pop. Influences such as Kate Bush, Trent Reznor and Billie Eilish reveal themselves in subtle ways. Dancing between the light and the dark, the alt and the pop, 'contrast' - both visually and sonically, is a theme she enjoys exploring.

Rxth's lyrical themes range from emotional explorations, human nature, and self-reflection to questions of consciousness and where we came from.

Her other passions of personal transformation, psychology, and spirituality are subtly woven into her lyrics. She enjoys having one foot in the mystical, spiritual and unknown. Hence the X in her name – representing the unknown element in any equation.

She aims to be uplifting, whilst exploring the depths to bring light where it's needed. Rxth hopes her music leaves you better than it found you and to remind you that you aren't alone with your big feelings and big questions.

Background:

Rxth has written music since she was a child and says it has always been a part of how she processes her inner and outer world. She credits it as being a form of therapy and catharsis, giving meaning and beauty to life's ups and down by transforming them into art, music and goosebumps.

She went on to study music at university, then writing and gigging in bands in London, playing small festivals, working in the industry, and later a short spell writing and producing professionally for commissions (film and products).

While all great experiences, it was her passion for writing and sharing her own music that felt most authentic to her.

Currently working on her debut album which sees her take the reins on production with a dark cinematic feel and lyrical themes of overcoming challenge and heartache.